Possible changes in local people's attitudes to tourism as a destination develops

Initial phase of development; local people welcome tourists; mutual interest and satisfaction; little planning or control of tourism.

Tourism expands; tourists taken for granted; contact between local people and tourists becomes more commercial and formal; marketing of the destination.

Saturation point approaches; further expansion of tourist facilities; local people express concerns about the impacts of tourism on their lives; much promotion of the destination.

Irritation and annoyance openly expressed; conflicts occur; local people see tourists as the cause of all their problems; attempts to overcome a decline in the destination's reputation.
