Biogas digesters help to solve energy issues in Kenya

Kenya has a high dependence on biomass for its energy consumption – in 2014 wood fuel (firewood and charcoal) accounted for 69% of energy consumption. Between 2005 and 2014 the amount of wood used for cooking increased from 27 million m<sup>3</sup> to 75 million m<sup>3</sup>.

The solution might, in part, come from the use of biogas digesters (shown above). The biogas digesters use any bio-degradable material e.g. animal or human waste, garden weeds and kitchen waste. They are highly efficient, have a life span of over 10 years and come in varying sizes.
